Bohemija kao teritorija pod upravom Austro-Ugarskog carstva do početka XIX vijeka razvila je značajnu muzičku aktivnost koja je samo sporadično izlazila izvan granica zemlje. Zahvaljujući podsticaju koji je romantizam dao nacionalnim školama, češka muzika je u drugoj polovini XIX stoljeća postala poznata širom Evrope. Njen uspon nije bio oslobođen političkih zahtjeva za otklon od austrijske dominacije: cenzura, represija, poreza i proglašenja njemačkog za zvanični jezik. Ovakav ambijent bio je idealan za pojavu češke nacionalne škole u muzici, čiji su najznačajniji predstavnici Bedžih Smetana (1824–1884) i Antonjin Dvoržak (1841–1904).

Kompozicije Antonjinina Dvoržaka publiku je počela da prihvata tek 1878. godine kada je napisao serije Slovenskih igara. Nakon dobijene stipendije od strane austrijske vlade namijenjene mladim kompozitorima, kao i podrške i naklonosti Johanesa Bramsa, postigao je međunarodni uspjeh, kako za svoj kompozitorski rad tako i za izuzetan doprinos na mjestu dirigenta orkestra. Pored dirigentske i kompozitorske djelatnosti u periodu između 1892. i 1895. godine bio je direktor Nacionalnog kozervatorijuma u Njujorku.

Dvoržak se smatra utemeljivačem češke instrumentalne muzike, a njegov obiman kompozitorski opus obuhvata deset opera (od kojih je najpoznatija Rusalka), brojna kamerna djela, horske kompozicije, koncerte (za klavir, violinu, violončelo), uvertire, simfonijske poeme i devet simfonija.

Bohemia as a territory under the administration of the Austrian-Hungarian Empire until the beginning of XIX century developed significant music activity, which only sporadically went outside the country borders. Owing to the incentive which Romanticism gave to national schools, Czech music became well known all over Europe in the second half of XIX century. Its rise was not freed from political requests for liberation from Austrian domination: censorships, repression, taxes and proclamation of the German language as the official one. Such an environment was ideal for the appearance of Czech national school in music, whose most significant representatives are Bedřich Smetana (1824–1884) and Antonín Dvořák (1841–1904).

The audience started to accept compositions of Antonin Dvorak only in 1878 when he wrote a series of Slovene dances. When he obtained the scholarship of the Austrian government for young composers, as well as support and inclination of Johannes Brahms, he achieved international success, both for his composing work and for exceptional contribution at the position of orchestra conductor. Besides conducting and composing activity, in the period between 1892 and 1895 he was the Director of the National Conservatorium in New York.

Dvorak is considered the founder of Czech instrumental music, and his copious composing opus includes ten operas (the most famous of which is Rusalka), numerous chamber works, choir compositions, con-

Koncert za violončelo i orkestar u h-molu jedan je od „bisera“ solističke literature za violončelo. Napisan je 1896. godine za vrijeme kompozitorovog boravka u Njujorku, a premijerno ga je izveo Leo Stern 19. marta iste godine. U ovoj kompoziciji Dvoržak značajnu ulogu daje orkestru, što se oslikava i u opsežnoj orkestarskoj ekspoziciji prvog stava. Drugi stav – Adagio ma non troppo – sa smirenom, sjetnom prvom temom predstavlja sjećanje na mladost, dok finalni stav donosi obilje radosti i snage sa prizvukom češke melodije.

Simfoniju broj 8 u G-duru Dvoržak je komponovao u ljeto 1889. godine, za vrijeme boravka u češkom selu Visoka. U literaturi se ovo djelo često naziva „Simfonijom prirode“ – obojena životnom radošću pojavila se u periodu kada su kod većine stvaralaca prevladavala sasvim suprotna raspoloženja. U prvom stavu kompozitor mimetičkim sredstvima „slika“ ptičje cvrkutanje, dok drugi stav predstavlja melanholični, poetični Adagio koji podsjeća na baladu. Umjesto skerca, na mjestu trećeg stava je valcer, a cjelokupan ciklus kulminira u finalu – „apoteozi domovine i prirode“.

certos (for the piano, violin, violoncello), overtures, symphony poems and nine symphonies.

Concerto for violoncello and orchestra in b minor is one of the “gems” of soloist literature for violoncello. It was written in 1896 during his stay in New York, and it was performed for the first time by Leo Stern on March 19 of the same year. In this composition Dvorak gave a prominent role to the orchestra, which is reflected in the comprehensive orchestra exposition of the first movement. The second movement – Adagio ma non troppo – with a quiet, melancholy first theme represents memory of youth, while the final movement brings abundance of joy and power with the overtone of Czech melody.

Dvorak composed Symphony number 8 in G Major in summer 1889 during his stay in the Czech village Visoka. In literature this work is frequently called “Symphony of Nature” – coloured with the joy of life, it appeared at the period when quite opposite dispositions prevailed in most artists. In the first movement the composer “depicts” bird chirping with mimetic means, while the second movement represents the melancholic, poetic Adagio that reminds of a ballad. Instead of a scherzo, in the place of the third movement is a waltz, and the entire cycle culminates in a finale – “an apotheosis of native country and nature”.
